were treat shots, and both swore that they fired through the head of the ghost, who never hesitated for a moment, but continued his march toward them. Then the watchers all fied in terror.

Then followed one of the most curious episodes in the history of the City of Mexico. Night after night the ghost appeared. Several police officers, noted for their bravery and fearlessness, made up their minds that the ghost was a fake and they determined to expose it. So they repaired to the scene of his ghost-shiu's nightly wanderings. The ghost appeared as usual and the three men sprang upon it at the same time with drawn swords. But their swords rebounded from the body of the ghost as though they had been driven against a stone wall, and the ghost, not hesitating for one moment, continued its way and disappeared within the walls of a little cemetery which existed in the reprofessions. within the walls of a little cemetery which existed in that part of the city at that time.

when a man was liable to be held up if he ventured to step outside his own door after dark.

The Church of Jesus was then one of the fashlonable places of worship of the city and its life flowed along peacefully enough. But one morning the city was electrified by the news that a ghost had been seen in the narrow street leading to the church, and that the poor old sexton who had seen it had been frightned almost out of his senses.

But there were these who doubted the ghost story, for they remembered that the sextion though a stout, muscular fellow, was old and he was known to be sometimes in a condition in which men are given to seeing double. So some of the doubting ones repaired the following night to the narrow street, leading to the church; and sure enough, just as the clock struck 12 the ghost appeared. It was a tail figure dressed in grave clothes and its eyes were like two balis of fire. Where it came from no one knew, for it came suddenly upon them when their backs were turned.

But the watchers were brave men and two of them drew their pistols, which they kept carefully primed for the occasion, and fired at the figure. Both were dead shots, and both swore that they fired through the head of the ghost. who never hesitated for a moment, but continued his march toward them. Then
